Bob McMahon, 17, of Whitemarsh, is now an old amateur among junior golfers. Twice in a row he has won the Philadelphia championship. This year's came easy at St. Davids yesterday.

He won over another codger, Jay Sigel, 17, of Bala, 6 and 5. He made it on the 13th with a sloop—60 feet—plus one foot to the bucket for par four.

It was a good win. Sigel is State champion. It was also a bad win for the likes of McMahon who dislikes come-easy success.

Next to the soft touch, he dislikes most being called "Bobby." Make it Bob, he says. But mothers do have some say. With mom, it's Bobby.

Sigel has a golfing fault easily noticed by a non-golfer. He can't win them all. That weakness cost him yesterday because McMahon was steady when in need of a deciding drop.

It is shortness of youth that makes it delectable, but it is nowhere near as hard to endure as tournament director Mrs. C. Joseph Burnett would have you believe.

She couldn't hold up without those flights, eights, yammerers and parents who would like, but are forbidden, to stroll the fairway route with their brats.

In a game furbished with the hole-in-one as a shopworn novelty, headmistress Burnett takes surcease from boredom from a repeat such as McMahon's. Such repetition has been rare in 46 years of Philadelphia boys junior golf championships.
